BIOGRAPHICAL

Joseph Pollard Chamberlin spent his entire life on his farm and became a very prominent man in the community. He resided at Afton and Oriskany Falls, NY. He was a member of the New York Assembly in 1834 and 1852, postmaster of S. Bainbridge (now Afton) 1833-43; sheriff of Chenango county 1843-46; and a Justice of the Peace. In his office as Justice of the Peace, he tried Joseph Smith, founder of Mormonism, for false pretense. A Colonel in the local militia.

He was urged to become a United States senator and the gubernatorial nomination was tendered him by both political parties, but he declined to assume the burdens which his acceptance of these honors would have involved. A man of generous impulses, he gave liberally to all projects for the betterment of the neighborhood, but when it was decided to rename the village of South Bainbridge, and many desired to call it Chamberlin or Chamberlinville, he gave his influence in favor of Afton.

Chenango county was formed from Montgomery county in 1798. Afton was formerly called South Bainbridge but was not renamed until 1857.

His second wife survived him as was living in Minneapolis, MN, December 1857. Her name is confusing at best.
