BIOGRAPHICAL

Sarah, also Sally, joined the Baptist church in Sturbridge when she was 14 years of age. After her marriage to Jacob Estey, they kept a tavern at Warwick for some time. She kept a diary or journal of her life and recorded that teamsters liked to put up at their inn, “because she would warm their beds with a warming pan.” She wrote an interesting story of her life, which was preserved in the family of her brother John.

Her nephew Stillman Chamberlain, invited the aged couple to spend their last days in his home, and they did so, after selling their homestead. (This must have occurred before 1826—as Stillman died that year. Undoubtedly his aunt and uncle remained with his widow until their deaths in 1829.) This information was obtained from letters of Stillman, his father John, and his sister Susan.
