BIOGRAPHICAL

Their marriage record says they were both of Boston, MA.

When he was a young married man, he went south to find work, arriving at Savanna, Georgia, 26 Aug 1859. He obtained business at Camden, Alabama, until the outbreak of the Civil War.

He tried to return to Massachusetts but was unable to do so and public opinion compelled him to enlist in the Confederate army. He was subsequently discharged on account of asthma, 13 Feb 1862. He was forced to enter the Ordnance department and worked in that until August 1864. He had found a young Englishman, who had also been forced into Confederate service, and they made their escape in a boat through streams emptying into Mobile Bay. At length, they found a federal ship, whose officers took them in, and they soon proved their honesty. After taking the necessary oaths, they were put ashore in a safe place. Daniel finally made his way home to Woburn, MA.

He had a happy life there and was in good health until a week before his death.
