BIOGRAPHICAL

He lived in Canterbury, NH, and Chelsea, MA. He worked his father's farm until he was about 17 years old, at which time he attended the district school for about two years. At the age of 20, he accompanied his brother-in-law, Thomas Curry Bradley (husband of his sister, Martha Clough Chamberlain), on a trip to Australia, where he remained for eight years—working in a variety of areas. After returning home to New Hampshire, he married and carried on his wife's farm at Canterbury.

Before 1870, he moved to Chelsea, MA, where he was superintendent and part owner of the Sawyer Blueing Company until his death.

As a man, his disposition was the kind which brought out the best from all in whom he had contact; never argumentative nor aggressive; he was, even so, never underestimated by others.
