BIOGRAPHICAL

Ben farmed for awhile in Humboldt county after his father's death. Later, he went to Colorao and finally to Aguanga, California (near San Diego). His wife and son joined him later. Ben was a natural student and very talented in music. He was also a skilled carpenter and earned his living with this trade after going out west. His wife (Marie?) became an arthritic cripple early in their married life.

His niece, Maxine, speaks of visiting him once in California when he and his wife were both elderly. "He lived in the mountains. He was a talented man who somehow didn't reach his potential. If he had lived later, he might have been successful as a musician. He was able to play several instruments but excelled with the violin."
